NaTakallam in Higher Education: Case Studies

Higher Education: Language Sessions

Overview:

In collaboration with the Middle East Institute at Columbia University, NaTakallam enriches Arabic and Persian courses, giving students immersive language practice with native speakers.

Our Collaboration:

Integrated Learning:

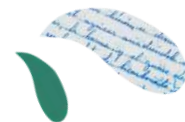

Arabic professors use NaTakallam for dialect exposure, while Persian instructors incorporate it into coursework for assignment support and communication practice.

Open Fund Partnership:

Through Columbia's Middle East Institute (MEI), students can apply for independent language sessions, designed to complement their studies.

Syllabus-Backed Sessions:

NaTakallam sessions are officially part of course syllabi and required for final grades

Impact:

500+ Sessions and Growing:

Students engage in Arabic (Egyptian, Palestinian, Syrian, Lebanese, & Modern Standard Arabic) and Persian (Farsi, Dari) with native-speaking Language Partners.

"Learning with a Language Partner allows students to practice a language in a productive, but pressure-free, environment. It also provides the unique opportunity to meet someone new."

Higher Education: Cross-Border Conversations

Overview:

At the University of South Florida, NaTakallam is integrated into the International Human Rights and Migration course since 2019.

Through cultural exchange sessions, more than 200+ students have gained real-world insights into migration issues and the experiences of displaced individuals.

Our Collaboration:

Students connect with individuals from countries like Venezuela, Nicaragua, DRC, Burundi, Afghanistan, and Syria to hear firsthand accounts of migration and displacement.

Enhancing Global Awareness

Students gain personal insights into the experiences of forcibly displaced individuals, and gain deeper understanding of global migration issues and their human impact.

Curriculum Integration

Students interview Language Partners in English about their migration experiences and produce reports on their findings as part of their course curriculum.

Impact:

NaTakallam's partnership with USF is featured in the Journal of Intercultural Education, showcasing the impact of NaTakallam's services at the university.

Higher Education: Refugee Voices Sessions

Overview:

NaTakallam's Refugee Voices sessions offer universities the flexibility to choose a theme, connecting them to a refugee whose personal story aligns with the topic.

Your Theme, Their Story

You pick the subject, and we match you with a refugee who brings authentic experience to the conversation.

Real-Life Perspectives

Sessions are centered around sharing the lived experiences of refugees, providing a deeper connection to academic content.

Our Collaboration:

At the University of Pennsylvania, professors sought to understand how the arts, music, literature, and more, shape the refugee experience, particularly during protest and displacement.

Summer program students interacted with a refugee, learning how the arts shaped their life in Syria and through displacement.

Students gained a deeper appreciation for how creative expression serves as both resistance and survival.
